Artist Bio

Ashraf Yousefi is a music educator, music therapist, painter, author, and researcher with over two decades of professional experience across the fields of music, visual arts, therapy, and education. A graduate of the Hajibeyli Music Academy in Baku and certified in music therapy from Duke University, she has developed an integrative and human-centered approach that bridges art, psychology, and healing. Her participation in international conferences and publication of bilingual (Persian-English) works reflect a commitment to both academic rigor and emotional depth. Dr. Yousefi's multifaceted contributions have shaped a distinctive and authentic voice in contemporary art, while her dedication to mentoring the next generation of musicians and researchers continues to inspire.

Artist Statement

For me, music is not merely sound—it is the unfiltered language of the soul. Every note echoes a lived experience, a feeling, a moment transformed into vibration. Over more than two decades of artistic exploration, I've come to see music not just as a form of expression, but as a tool for healing, connection, and inner reconstruction.

My approach to creating and teaching music is a fusion of tradition and innovation—rooted in the rich heritage of Iranian and Azerbaijani music, yet intertwined with modern techniques of music therapy and psychoacoustic awareness. Every piece I perform or guide is an invitation to look inward, to hear what silence has hidden. I seek music not through genre, but through meaning. I believe every person carries a unique sound within, and when that sound is truly heard, it has the power to transform the world.

Artist Vision

I see music not merely as an art form, but as a healing language—one that soothes pain, connects hearts, and awakens minds. My vision is to create a space where music goes beyond performance and instruction, becoming a tool for inner growth, emotional balance, and deep human connection.

On my artistic journey, I strive to be a bridge between education and therapy; a place where learning music is not just a technical skill, but a soulful and transformative experience. By blending music therapy, creative expression, and a passion for teaching, my goal is to nurture a new generation of learners who feel music with their hearts, not just play it with their hands.

For me, music is a mission: to build a kinder, more conscious, and more harmonious world.
